

Claim for the property

Question:

I'm married for six years. Before marriage my husband had real estate, for which he paid a monthly credit (2,000 EUR per month). After the wedding, we were repaying the loan by joint efforts: from his and my income. Do I have the right to claim for a part of the property after the divorce? 27/03/2015

Response:

According to the relevant law, even if the immovable property is registered in the name of your husband, you do have the right to claim for your share of the said property. It will depend not only on your actual money contributions regarding the property, but also from any other support and assistance that you may have provided for your spouse (i.e., domestic cares or bringing up children, etc.), which according to the provisions of the law helped him to increase his fortune. In this case, you'll need your lawyer to apply for the settlement imuschestvennyhs pore against your husband.
